But as their training sessions heat up and Jake turns out to be the Dom she's always dreamed of, Catie finds out she's in serious danger of both exposure and heartbreak. Jacob Jayson had a life that looked good from the outside, too--immense wealth concealing a vile, abusive childhood. He's since accepted the fact that he's irreparably damaged, a man with an inhuman heart who is incapable of love. That is, until Catie Roberts shows up. Catie makes him feel things he'd never dreamed of, and soon he finds himself falling in love. Yet Jake can tell that Catie is hiding something, and unless he can find out what, he fears he may lose her. But Jake has secrets of his own, secrets that, if exposed, might cost him everything--including Catie. Both of them have every reason not to trust in love. Can they learn to trust each other?

But . . . not everything about him is awful. His Davy Crockett act just seems like a cover for his fear of intimacy, and part of me wants to show him it's okay to get close to people. And, I mean, sue me, but I have fantasized about real discipline. Not role-play, but like, Dave, you're gonna be thirty in four years and you still work in a mall; get your ass in gear or I'll spank it. Not that I'd ever trust anyone with that kind of control. I'm gonna redefine "battle of wills" for the Disciplinarian. Or I'm gonna bone him. It's hard to say. -Dave
