The Nose Introduction. Sure, he ended his life burning parts of his most famous work and generally acting loony, but hey, for a while there Gogol—or Nikolai Vailievich Gogol, if you're feeling fancy—was on quite the roll. In 1835, he was still a reasonably fresh face in Russia (he was about 27), but dude had already hit it out of the park with The Government Inspector —a hilarious, satirical play making fun of provincial bureaucrats.

Social status is one of the most important themes in Gogol's " The Nose." At the time of writing, Russian bureaucracy was a vastly inflated system for Russians to move up the ranks to nobility through service to the government. As such, positions within the bureaucracy were highly coveted and depended greatly on status.
