Boyne (Crippen, 2006, etc.) offers a historical fantasy about a 256-year-old man. Matthieu Z é la is a fortunate man. He has discovered the secret of perpetual middle age, as Oscar Levant said of Zsa Zsa Gabor. Though never a father himself, he has lived through nine generations of nephews, each of whom, after fathering a son, has died in his 20s; Matthieu has been given their unused years.
